CLIMATE

Climatic Characteristics in Varna

During the Second Decade of June

Usually summer on the Bulgarian Black Sea coast starts after a cold and long spring which is characteristic of the area. The atmospheric processes in June are almost the same as in May. Therefore the two months are united in one synoptic season, called the "first half of the summer." On June 21 at 01:34 the astronomical summer commences.

In June the sun rises highest above the horizon and the duration of daylight is greatest, reaching 15 hours and 20 minutes. The average air temperature in Varna in the second decade of June is 20.5 degrees. Precipitations during this month are short in duration but torrential often accompanied by thunder and temporary increase of wind. The average rainfall for the second ten-day period is 20 mm with an average of 4 days with precipitation. The average wind speed is 3.1 m / s. During the month breeze circulation settles. The relative air humidity is about 75%. The sea is most often force 1-2 , however in the afternoon along the coast it may temporarily reach force 3 because of the breeze . In Varna Bay the average values of the significant wave is up to 20 cm. The temperature of the sea water is 18.7 degrees on average.
